Jerusalem Post Reporter

Finance Minister Yoram Aridor last night claimed victory in his struggle to raise 1855 billion with a two-pronged strategy of reducing state spending and mustering new income through taxation and various fees.

"It appears we have done it," a weary but confident Aridor told reporters summoned hurriedly to his office in Jerusalem. "To be precise, we have accounted so far not for IS55b, but for IS54,985b, Of this sum, IS3b. is still under negotiation between Education Minister Zevulun Hammer and myself.

Aridor gave the following hreakdown, approved by the cabinet on Sunday, but not made public until yesterday.

(One item - cancellation of birth grants for mothers - was specifically denied by a cabinet spokesman Sunday night, but 'corrected" by Aridor last night.):

Agreed-upon cuts in the budgets of government ministries - 1830,-785m.; cancellation of next October's candidate and party financing law -- IS500m.; income taxes on a family's first two child allowances - IS1,900m.; National Insurance Institute cuts and new revenues (cancellation of birth grant, increased contributions from self-employed, reduced lateretirement benefits, increased penalties for late payments) — IS2,-800m.: taxes and fees (travel tax and purchase taxes) - ISIOb.; a supplementary i per cent budget cut from all ministries - 156b.; and school and university budget reductions (still under discussion) —

Cancellation of party financing and the work holiday for the upcoming municipal elections on October 25 will require convening of the Knesset, since these two measures were written into law before the Knesset rose for its sum-Mer recess

Claiming that such substantial budget cuts as those approved by the cabinet are "unprecedented in Israeli history," Aridor lunged into a bitter attack on Histadrut Secretary-General Yeroham Meshel for allegedly refusing to enter into negotiations on a wage-price-taxation package deal. He said: "The Histadrut is attempting to dodge a basic economic fact of life - with our economy being in the state it is in, an increase in real wages can and must lead to large-scale unemployment. Since the Histadrut does not wish to cooperate with me, I had no choice but to initiate these stringent moves. "First the labour federation refuses to cooperate with us. Then, when we act, they accuse us of acting unilaterally, without consulting them!" As for the size of the budget cuts, Aridor had this to say: "It is much easier to make meaningless reductions in the various budgets. That looks nice on the books, but does almost nothing to rehabilitate a weak economy. Another reason for the deep cuts was that the more we trim, the less new money we shall have to print. Printing money, gentlemen, only fuels the flaming fires of inflation.

According to Aridor, all previous economic programmes launched by

Shortly after the incident, Israeli forces in the area launched a search for the attackers. They found the tracks of at least three men leading to Syrian lines.

During the pursuit, Israel Defence Forces artillery fired several salvoes.

The charge went off when the soldiers, driving in a jeep and an armoured personnel carrier, were patrolling the area. Amik is one of the closest points of IDF deployment opposite the Syrians in the

The Druse in the Shouf are reported to have prepared a full-scale battle plan to take over areas of strategic importance to them, before Phalange or Lebanese Army units move in to replace the IDF. As a result, military planners have taken into account that the withdrawal — the timing of which still has to be decided - may take place under fire, and they have taken the necessary measures to minimize the threat.

Lebanon's Shouf Mountains were quiet yesterday, as rival Druse and Christian militiamen honoured a truce following Monday's fierce artillery exchanges

During the day special U.S. envoy Robert McFarlane conferred with Lebanese foreign minister Elie Salem on ways to reach a conciliation in the Shouf before Israel's impending pullback from the area. There has been much speculation in Beirut about the date of the pullback, with next Sunday being widely cited as the deadline. However, the Lebanese govern-

Israel to aid Liberia in farming and medicine

Israeli experts are to leave soon for Liberia to examine the country's agricultural problems and draw up an aid plan. This was agreed yesterday in meetings held in Jerusalem by Liberian President Samuel Doe with Premier Menachem Begin and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

Also promised is aid in the treatment of eye diseases in Liberia and cooperation in the establishment of a Liberian national maritime company. (See page 2)

Doe and his party are the first black African leaders officially to visit Israel since most of the continent's states severed diplomatic relations with Israel following the Yom Kippur War in 1973.

Yesterday the Liberian leaders met with Begin and Shamir for talks and a working lunch. Begin expressed gratitude to Doe for his "courageous decision to reestablish diplomatic relations." He said he hopes others would follow in Doe's footsteps.

The major subjects of discussion yesterday were Libya's invasion of Chad and relations between Israel and Liberia. The Liberians asked for Israel's aid in improving their country's agriculture, upgrading its ophthalmology services and the creation of a national shipping line.

Later, at a state dinner at Beit Hanassi, Doe said, "A just and lasting peace cannot prevail in the Middle East without due recognition of the God-given rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to a state of their own."

"Care must be taken not to allow Israel's legitimate need to defend itself to be equated to a situation where those who have been seen as victims of suffering are perceived as inflicting suffering on others." Doe

Throughout his speech, Doe reiterated Liberia's admiration for Israel and hailed the ties which have linked the two countries since 1948.

Doe said that Libya's continued intervention in Chad is viewed by Liberia "with utmost regret and dismay.'

He called on the world to support "the legitimate government of President Hissene Habre in order to resist Libyan aggression and preserve Chadian sovereignty."

President Chaim Herzog, who hosted the dinner, also devoted part of his speech to the Libyan invasion Chad. He charged that Col. Muammar Gaddafi is trying to turn Chad "into a vassal state and the springboard for further aggression into Africa."

Earlier in the day, Doe visited Yad Vashem. He also laid a wreath at the grave of Theodor Herzl, before proceeding to the Knesset where he inspected an honour guard and was welcomed by Speaker Menahem Savidor. Today, Doe is scheduled to meet Defence Minister Moshe Arens and Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek.

MOSHAVIM IN CRISIS/Yosef Goell

Planned industrialization could provide a way out

Moshavim, like kibbutzim, were an expression of early Zionism's determination both to return to the ancestral homeland, and to work its soil. Well into the 1960s, work in agriculture enjoyed a high status in kibbutzim. In moshavim, by definition, every one worked the family

But by the 1960s, more and more kibbutzim realized that even highly sophisticated, successful farming could not ensure the middle class standard of living to which Israel was becoming ac-By the late 1970s the kibbutz movement, whose original ideal had been a return to the soil. had changed: over half of the total income of all the 250-odd kibbutzim came from industry and tourism, rather than agriculture. And in the past five years, this trend has continued. With many moshavim in deep financial trouble and social ferment, the leadership of the Moshav

Movement, many of whom formerly opposed the industrialization of the moshav, are now banking on it as a last chance. in the early 1970s, a convention of the movement overwhelmingly rejected a proposal to investigate the possibility of introducing industry into moshavim. The present secretary-general of the movement, Amos Hadar of Nahalal, was against the idea, as was Reuven Eiland. Eiland is at present the head of Telem, Moshav Industries, a new movement enterprise which, in conjunction with Koor, the Histadrut's industrial holding company, is working on a plan for the

Eiland, a member of Moshav Kfar Hess in Emek Hefer, and director-general of the Ministry of Agriculture in the last Labour government, says that he was not opposed to industrialization per se, but believed it could be postponed for 20

"Were it not for the Likud government's stupid policies on the exchange rate and other factors affecting agriculture, Israel's flower growers would be exporting a billion and a half flowers today instead of 700 million, and an additional 15.0-00 moshav families could have been making a good living from exports," Eiland said. "Had this happened, we could have postponed introducing industry into moshavim, which is sure to generate

"Now we can't wait any longer and have to start working on it, and fast. In essence we have to learn what the problems of industrialization in moshavim are, on the job," he says. Telem, he adds, has no intention of involving itself directly in setting up industries in moshavim. Its purpose is to create conditions that would make it possible for individual moshavim to decide to industrialize intelligently if they so desire.

The idea, he says, is to work on both the supply and demand sides. In regard to supply, Telem is amassing a reservoir of proposals for industrial projects, guided by three criteria of suitability: that the industry be suited to the size of a typical moshav (between 60 to 80 families), meaning that it must not need a labour force of more than 25 at the outset; that the technologies involved are a challenge for the average moshavnik, and especially for the younger generation, meaning nothing that entails unimaginative repetitive production processess and "we also don't want 'dirty in-that the industry promise reasonable profitability, which, in the moshav context, means providing a reasonable salary with part of the profits being distributed to the moshav worker/owners. "We are aiming at a level of profits of about $15,000 a year per worker as a minimum for the first stage, and would like to get to $40,000 per worker a year," said Eiland. Eiland wants Telem to generate demand for industries in individual moshavim, too. What this entails, he explains, is the establishment of an awareness of the importance of industrialization and of suitable organizational, social and economic infrastructures in any moshav which decides to go into industry.

France rejects Chad bid for assault on rebels

PARIS. - France's special envoy to Libya yesterday ruled out "postcolonial operations" in Chad following an appeal by the Chad government for French troops to join a counter-attack against Libyan-backed rebels. Envoy Roland Dumas told Le Matin that despite the powerful air and paratroop force France had sent to Chad, the French government had not relaxed efforts to seek a diplomatic solution to the crisis. "There is no question of our launching a post-colonial operation," he said. "It is for this reason that the door remains wide open for a negotiated settlement, even if that looks difficult." In N'djamena, the official Chad press yesterday gave prominence to a government news agency commentary which alleged that France was planning a deal with Libya that would result in partition.

The agency said; "the idea of a partition appears to be increasingly attractive to some French circles. The thesis of a partition of Chad between two spheres of influence, one Libyan in the north and the other French over the south, resurfaces.

Chad Information Minister Soumaila Mahamat said yesterday that a large column of Libyan tanks and armoured vehicles had moved out of the northern outpost of Faya-Largeau and set up a new strongpoint in the desert 80 kilometres closer to Frenchmanned government positions.

Israelis active in European drug trade

TEL AVIV (Itim). - Israeli criminals play a prominent role in ths international trade in dangerous drugs, particularly in Western Europe, and some of them also deal in stolen property, Nitzav Yehezkel Carthy, chief of investigations in the Israel Police, said on Army Radio yesterday.

Recent reports in the British press on the activities of Israeli criminals in Britain led Carthy to complain that Britain's police ought not to announce just whom they are investigating at a given moment. Carthy noted that information obtained from the police in West European countries indicates that there are also concentrations of former Israeli criminals in other countries, notably Denmark, and in the cities of Amsterdam, Hamburg, and Frankfurt. Besides smuggling drugs and stolen property, these criminals have been implicated in thefts. burglaries and hold-ups. Asked about the motives of Israeli criminals in moving into "foreign markets," Carthy replied that "Israeli criminals are no different from their law-abiding compatriots, who seek new pastures in different conditions, fresh business opportunities and a general change in atmosphere." Then there is the aspect of "absorption": Israeli old-timers in one foreign country or another "absorb" their friends newly-arrived from Israel. By such means, little Israeli "settlements" are created, from where the Israelis can continue their criminal activities.

There is no problem of integration, since crime is a "profession" that knows no borders: the methods and means of operation are identical everywhere, Carthy said.

There is no difficulty in getting into the swim of things by joining forces with local criminals and learning from them how the local police operate.

Israelis abroad could thus continue in crime — until some of them at least are finally caught, Carthy

Liberia-Israel shipping link spans 20 years

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA, - Liberia once had a shipping company of its own, set up in partnership with an Israeli firm about 20 years ago. But it went out of business, after the death of the president William Tubman in 1971.

Yesterday it was reported that Liberia is again seeking Israeli help to set up a maritime company in order to get a share of its iron-ore export shipping. This is reportedly to be discussed now during the visit of President Samuel Doe.

The Liberian National Shipping Line was set up as a partnership of the Monrovia government and the Aaron Rosenfeld shipping company of Haifa, at Tubman's request. The company built two ships to transport iron ore. Liberia's major export to the U.S., which sailed for several years.

Uzan has, since Sunday, been in close contact with Deputy Premier and Housing Minister David Levy and Finance Minister Yoram Aridor. Uzan told reporters that in opposing the cabinet's decision to increase the purchase tax there were "no differences" between himand the finance minister. Yesterday Aridor arranged a meeting between Begin and the Tami leaders. The meeting will probably be held this morning, and Uzan is to demand that the cabinet reconsider its decisions. In reply to a question, Uzan said

He went on to say he is not insisting on the acceptance of any specific demands. "I am not in love with my proposals. I just want the rich to pay more," he stated.

To prove his point, he distributed copies of his letter to the cabinet secretary, written last Tuesday, in which he stated that his support for Aridor's policies was dependent on acceptance of his own suggestions or the submission of alternative proposals."

But Uzan is strongly opposed to ome of the proposals adopted on Sunday. He complained that the 10 per cent increase in purchase tax on items described as "luxury" was merely "throwing dust into peoples" to some amendments to last Sunday's decision in order to help Tami climb down from the tree. Minister without Portfolio Sara Doron told The Jerusalem Post last night that she believes that locally produced refrigerators should be exempt from the increase in purchase tax. We're not insistent on every detail," she said. But she was adamant in opposing Tami's plan to impose a tax on chequing accounts. "There can be no change on that," she stressed.

The Jami leaders appear to have been stung by the Liberals' success in foiling proposals to tax chequing accounts. Apparently Tami's failure to protect its own constitutents from cuts in National Insurance allowances stood out all the more glaringly, by contrast, and Tami is smarting over the Liberals seemingly having to more clout at the cabinet table. Thus, Uzan declared bitterly,

"under no circumstances will we be partners to a government whose basic guidelines were cancelled by the Liberal Party's victory in the cabinet. We don't represent the Liberal Party's constitutents, and this government was not elected by the people who vote for the Liberal But it is still too early to talk of an

to watch his back and take counsel

At that time, Kenya was the latest of a long line of African states to sever ties with Israel. (Only Liberia and the Ivory Coast remained.) The Algerian ambassador to Monrovia, who resided in Dakar, Senegal, rushed to Liberia with a personal letter from Algerian President Houari Boumedienne, pressuring President William Tolbert to sever ties. The letter ended with a sentence cautioning the late president that, apart from countries like Algeria, "other people and organizations are involved, which act in an irresponsible manner, and nobody can know what would happen to you and your brother should they take action."

Liberia has a tradition of leading the field in Africa, as far as relations with Israel are concerned. In November 1947, during the UN General Assembly vote on partition, the Liberian vote assured the necessary two-thirds majority to create the state. Israel set up a consulate-general in Monrovia in 1954 and an embassy in 1958. When it came to restoring diplomatic ties after the decade of rupture, Zaire beat Liberia to it by a few weeks. It now remains to be seen whether Doe's visit will set a trend.

Settlers to Arens: We don't feel safe

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT ARIEL. - Jewish settlers in

Samaria yesterday took issue with Defence Minister Moshe Arens' statements that the number of Arab attacks against them had declined during the past year. At a meeting with the minister after a tour of four Jewish settlements in Samaria, the settlers said they feel less secure now than a year ago.

Some suggested that Arens' statistics were misleading, because people who had been attacked stopped complaining about minor incidents, such as stone-throwing, if no damage was involved.

Meir Har-Noy, a member of the Council of Jewish Settlements in Judea, Samaria and Gaza, told Arens that a day does not pass without a stone being thrown at a bus carrying children or a person driving alone in his car. Many just ignore it unless the attack is successful and dumage is done, he said.

According to Benny Katzover, the chairman of the Samaria regional council, the frequency of Arabs spitting, cursing and making indecent gestures at Jews had increased. Arabs know they have 15 minutes between an attack and the arrival of security forces, he went Arens' attitude showed he stands by his statement, which he said was based on an analysis of statistics. Arens suggested a special debate to discuss the matter and the settlers agreed.

He rejected demands to expel stone-throwers. The belief that such measures would stop attacks was "too simplistic," he said. He equated such a course with the

IS3.6b. gap " By CHARLES HOFFMAN Jerusalem Post Reporter

A IS2.1 billion gap still separated Education Minister Zevulun Hammer and Finance Minister Yoram Aridor yesterday at the conclusion of their first round of intensive talks on reducing the budgets for schools this year.

· Also in dispute is the 10 per cent cut sought by Aridor in the universities' budgets, which would save another IS1.5b.

· The Education Ministry spokesman said that neither minister had budged from his initial position, but that the talks would continue today. The Treasury is demanding a IS4.6b. cut in the education budget, while the ministry says that it can afford to cut only IS2.5b.

The figure of IS2.5b. is actually a net cut of only ISIb., since the ministry seeks to raise IS1.5b. from an "education fee" to be nitposed only during this year. The fee of IS4,000, or IS330 a month unlinked, would be paid by 350,000 with children in school grade. Another 62,000 families in the three lowest income brackets with children in school would be exempt from the fee.

At the meeting with Aridor, Hammer said that a further 10 per cent cut in the universities' budget would force them to close. The universities' budgets were recently cut by about 10 per cent, and are still owed money by the Treasury for the 1982/83 academic year.

The main cut sought by the Treasury is to reduce school hours by at least four hours a week, in order to save on teachers' salaries. The Education Ministry says that a four-hour cut would mean firing 8.500 teachers, and that firing teachers at the start of the school year would violate their labour con-

Arens visits Bethlehem for talks

By ROBERT ROSENBERG Jerusalem Post Reporter

Defence Minister Moshe Arens vesterday visited Bethlehem and discussed with Mayor Elias Freii how to improve the quality of life there. Freij, who believes that a political solution to the problems of the West Bank is far off, called the hour-long talks "useful."

Arens and Freij began what Arens called a "dialogue" the day before, during meetings at the minister's Tel Aviv office. Yesterday's session was to discuss in greater detail problems facing the town.

Among these problems are an IS22 million deficit, problems caused "by the bureaucracy" in transfering money from the Arab world to the West Bank, and the release of security prisoners, Freij

"We all agree it usually takes a long time to solve political problems," Arens said after the meeting. "In the meantime, we must live together."

Describing Bethlehem as a model city "that can and should be an example that Jews and Arabs. Moslems and Christians" can live together, Arens promised Freij that he would do his best to help the mayor solve some of the more pressing municipal problems.

A source in Bethlehem city hall said officials hope the dialogue will give a boost to projects such as a refrigerated market for agricultural produce, a new city sewage system and major road work.

Arens was warmly greeted by Freij and other officials and both parties were all smiles before, during and after the meeting.

The last defence minister to visit Bethlehem was Ezer Weizman, who resigned the post in May 1980 over the issue of cuts in the defence budget. Arens arrived in Bethlehem by helicopter from Ariel. ### 'Soul of a Jew' a smash at Edinburgh

EDINBURGH (AP). - The Haifa Municipal Theatre play about an anti-feminist and anti-Semitic Jew that stirred controversy in Israel could be the drama hit of this year's Edinburgh International Festival. The audience at the music hall gave a rapturous reception Monday night to The Soul of a Jew by Ychoshua Sobol.

It seemed to vindicate festival director John Drummond, who brought over the Haffa Theatre group to stage the play. Critics in Israel had said it would only encourage anti-Semitism. Drummond told a news conference yesterday that the "warmth of the reception" justified his choice.

The play is spoken entirely in Hebrew with a simultaneous translation through earphones.

It is based on the life and ideas of Otto Weininger, a Viennese Jew who renounced his faith before shooting himself in 1903. The play ties in with this year's festival theme of the arts in Vienna before the First World War.

Under the headline "Triumph for Israelis," critic John Clifford of Scotland's national newspaper, The Scotsman, yesterday called the play intellectually enthralling and very deeply moving...it is easy to understand its impact in Israel, given its intense relevance to the country's current crisis of ideals and identity."

Clifford added: "Those of us who are gentiles inherit a long and terrible tradition of misogyny and anti-Semitism - we are not strangers to self-hatred and guilt."

Weininger's own Sex and Character, published four months before he died, caused an uproar in Europe and was later used by the Nazi propaganda machine.

In the play, Weininger argues with his fellow Jewish intellectuals. who are confronted by Austrian and German anti-Semitism on the one

Weininger abandoned Judaism because he did not believe the Jewish people could ever ultimately escape the stigma of hatred and be reborn through Zionism, the movement that inspired his friends. He despised women and argued that

Aryan masculinity would redeem humanity.

"I didn't want to judge Weininger he did that himself," Sobol told reporters. "I wanted to illuminate what brought about Zionism in Vienna at that time and the undercurrents that influence Israel

Bid to curtail undercutting by airlines

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. - Airline travellers are soon likely to find it useless to shop for cheap fares. New regulations being drafted by the Civil Aviation Administration are designed to restrict competition among the The proposed regulations presented to Transport Minister Haim Corfu ban airlines operating scheduled services to Israel from imposing restrictions on tickets sold here. Thus any scheduled airline would be allowed to honour any ticket issued by another scheduled carrier and bill the other for the full fare approved by the CAA. The ticket-issuing airline would also have to refund the full sum for an unused ticket.

The Transport Ministry and a spokesman for the panel of airlines operating in Israel said such restrictions have been successfully introduced in Europe To make sure that a passenger flies with them and does not use his pensive company, airlines have marked their tickets "not endorsable," "not refundable," or "valid on our routes only."

Thirty-eight moshavim have so far taken serious steps to take part in Telem's matching process; 16 have already chosen specific projects or are in the final stages leading to such a choice. Ein Vered, a veteran moshav in Emek Hefer, is to open an electronics plant next January, and a moshav along the Lebanese border may open its plastics plant even earlier.

Telem, in conjunction with Koor, is opening a four-to-five week course this December for moshavnik plant managers. Many moshav youngsters will be sent to vocational schools. "We know that in the first years we will have to buy managerial skills from the outside. We don't have production engineers in the moshavim. But once we get into the process, it is clear that we will have to send many of our sons to the Technion," Eiland said. Eiland envisages different ownership forms for these industries: those owned outright by an individual aguda; those owned by a partnership of several agudot; and regional industries owned by a regional consortium of agudot. Partnerships with private investors will also be encouraged at a level of just under 50 per cent ownership. The industries envisaged by Eiland are not the moshavim's first venture into industrialization.

Some regional purchasing associations own and operate industries, especially packing plants for farm produce. Their history is not particularly edifying: many are unnecessary and uneconomic expressions of empire building by local moshav "strongmen."

The Telem approach seems to be aimed at minimizing the risk of repeating such mistakes. The main problems seem to be social and human. Can industry, which requires clearly defined: manager and worker roles, be fitted into the cooperative moshav framework?

Even more serious is the problem of whether moshavim have the human resources to succeed in the sort of sophisticated industry that alone can provide the income level to which most moshavniks aspire.

Pinhas Sapir, the father of Israel's 1950s industrialization drive, saddled Israel with many. white elephant textile plants which only manage to pay starvation wages to Arab workers.

Starting from scratch, Sapir decided to go into: textiles, because his Polish background taught him that it was the Jews of Poland, who had; brought industry to that country in the late 19th century. This was especially true of textiles in

Why, he asked, shouldn't the Jews of Israel be able to pull off the same feat? But he reckoned. without the existence of Hongkong, Taiwan, Singapore or Seoul.

But the family-based moshav may well havegreat natural advantages in going into the hightechnology modern equivalent of the older cottage industries.

But such an optimistic vision can only be realized if there is a commensurately high level of ... human resources available in the moshay.

Sadly, most moshav schools are very poor Getting moshav industries off the ground will depend. Some have been the source of financial corrupon improving moshav schools, and raising them: to the level of kibbutz schools. This is a revolution long overdue for the moshav movement.

ZOHAR KARTI, the dynamic head of the Women's Bureau of the Ministry of Labour and Social Services, has made thousands of working mothers in Israel happy.

She and her staff have caused a revolution among working mothers," she says.

"Years ago there was no awareness of the needs of working women — particularly working mothers, explains Karti, at her office in Tel Aviv. "In 1970, there were 200 day-care centres in the country with 19,900 children enrolled in them. But we started a whole new system whereby the municipalities build centres and various women's organizations run them, and today we have four times as many centres and they care for some 45,000 children - about onethird from poor families."

Twenty years ago, Karti began working for the Ministry of Labour's manpower planning divi-

"I didn't pay much attention at that point to the situation of working women," she admits, "but after the Six Day War, I saw that Israel wasn't going to have enough manpower. "There were air bases to build in the Sinai, a growing population and a developing welfare state. I saw that it was necessary to create conditions for women to work. At that time, we had a lower percentage of working women than did most other developed countries."

Always keen to observe at first hand. Karti conducted extensive surveys and studies on the future of manpower in Israel. She came up with some proposals based on simple economic calculations, and urged the ministry to start a committee on women in the work force.

In 1970, Karti launched what began as a pilot project with a handfull of staff spread around the country. By 1975, her project had become acceptable to high level Ministry of Labour officials, and the Women's Bureau was established Karti herself became adviser to the Minister of Labour on economic, sociological and legal aspects of the status of women. As a department head - the highest post held by a woman in the ministry she is empowered to review ministry regulations for policies which discriminate against women.

"At the beginning," she recalls with a smile, "They didn't take me seriously. It's different now because I am head of a department. My approach has always been professional, serious. I don't just yell and scream, and I stand up for issues I think I can succeed with. If a subject is important enough I bring in reports. I find examples to back up my arguments."

KARTI considers herself a feminist without the negative connotations of the word. My approach is to work through persuasion, not struggle... And now that we have some legal basis to go on and women have proved themselves in the work force, we can start to talk about equality with men."

The "revolution" her bureau has wrought includes the establishment of three different kinds of day-care centres - year-round centres for nursery school- and kindergartenaged children as well as for family groups (mishpahtonim), and vacation

Karti spends much of her time dealing with administrative affairs - suggesting sites and working out the logistics and funding for new day-care centres, and reporting on the progress of her bureau to the minister. She is constantly racing around the country to meet with members of various organizations, community centres, and government agencies to advise them on issues ranging from maternity leave, to national insurance for working women, to the rights of women on

Woman power

The lives of working women in Israel have greatly improved since the establishment of the Women's Bureau of the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare.

Women's Bureau head Zohar Karti talks to Amy Levinson.

Zohar Karti's hope for the future is that more women will see their work "not as a job, but as a career." (Jesz, Szelinski) moshavim. She also frequently visits day-care centres "to get an idea of what is happening there."

A year ago, Karti completed her master's degree in labour studies at Tel Aviv University in an effort, once again, "to keep pace with what is going on in the theoretical field.

It was good to have experience before going to study," she says, adding that it took her several years to finish the degree.

Karti stresses that her husband, a private businessman, gives her the moral support she needs to pursue her career. Karti worked "threefourths time" until her two children entered school, at which point she also became the head of the Women's Bureau.

One of the biggest priorities among the bureau's staff is encouraging women of all backgrounds to work. The conflict between family and career makes this a difficult goal to achieve, and prevents the development of the 'norm" of the career woman, says Karti.

In an attempt to convince hesitant women to enter the work force - and to ease their way once they're there — the Women's Bureau puts out a number of pamphlets and publications, describing the services offered to working women, their economic and legal rights and available daycare facilities.

"When people talk about women in the work place, for the most part, they refer to those at higher levels, not to disadvantaged women, Karti explains, "I think the gap between women of different backgrounds in this country is no smaller than that between men and women in general."

The head of the Women's Bureau is particularly proud of the workshops her staff has instituted around the country, aimed at returning women to the work force.

"I believe that women need an incentive to go back to work, especially those without much education. Beginning three years ago at community centres and other public places in development areas, we began organizing workshops on assertiveness, decision-making, selecting careers, and related topics. We get experienced women to teach the workshops and we've been very pleased with the resnonse. On women in higher positions Karti stresses that, "Israel needs professionals. It's a professional world. Roles are changing and we can't go back. Women should be learning professions, and once they are working in them, make their way up the ladder. This is, however, a rather slow process." Why are so few women in high management positions? "First of all," says Karti, "there are certain built-in problems, such as the fact that women tend to work part-time. There are also power struggles and discrimination.

She also cites the disadvantages women have on completing army service. They leave without the technical and professional grooming their male counterparts have received. Another problem is that women are not looked upon as potential managers.

These obstacles notwithstanding, Karti's hope for the future is that more women will begin to see working as a means of personal advancement, and as a source of pride and satisfaction — that they will see their work "not as a job, but as a career."

"I think there is a change in Israel," she concludes, "The division of labour is changing, and there is a new generation of women from many different ethnic backgrounds going to study. There are fewer women going into the services.

"Physical strength no longer prevents women doing 'male' jobs, because everything is done by pushing buttons and using brainpower. We need to recognize the differences between the sexes, but not to apologize for them."

Riki comes home

Riki Ben Ari is a designer who reads fashion trends like Indians read smoke signals. Greer Fay Cashman reports.

Rikma swimsuit designed by Ben Ari.

What she admires most about with more sophisticated tastes. Her summer T-shirts and T-dresses are made up of integrated and coordinated fabrics, many with her own abstract prints, and feature much more detailing than the average T-shirt. Mix-and-match pants, shorts and skirts in limited editions, complete the collection. Currently catering to women's whims, Farfoory plans to expand into men's-wear next seasion. He looks on his two seasons with Ben Ari as something of a coup. The combined quality of her design and his production techniques opened up markets in Germany. France, Belgium, England, Switzerland and America. Says Farfoory wistfully, "I'd like to be able to bring back all the Israeli designers working abroad."

Rikma's Issy Hananel shares Farfoory's dream. Rikma's sensational winter collection, unveiled in Ellat six months ago, was created by Tamara Yovel, an Israeli who made her name during the seven years she lived in Italy. Like Ben Ari, Yovel is good at projecting the future. Her handwriting characterizes Rikma's summer sportswear collection. Hananel prevailed on Ben Ari to create Rikma's comprehensive beachwear story.

Ben Ari can't praise Yovel highly enough. Years ago - long before Yovel hit the big time - Ben Ari bought one of her tunics. "It was a fabulous thing. I wore it for more than 10 years." She is angry that Hananel's sister, Roky Ben Joseph, has spent the past few years designing household accessories instead of fashion. "She does very well at what she's doing, but fashion is really her forte. I have a feeling she's going to come back to it soon. I certainly hope so.'

În Paris, Ben Ari's Promostyl colleagues proudly introduce her as "our fashion expert from Israel," but when she worked here as the Israel Export Institute's key fashion consultant, local manufacturers belittled her. There was a general attitude of. "So what makes you think you know everything?" It was irrelevant that she was bringing the latest information from Paris to the Israeli scene. "It's different now," she says. "Israeli fashion has mproved enormously — everyone has a more forward approach."

For her two Israeli collections, Ben Ari had to execute a mental balancing act. Here she was creating for Summer 1984, whereas in the course of her work at Promostyl, she has already completed work for the summer of 1985. Who dictates fashion? Where do designers get their ideas? What invisible thread pulls everyone in the same direction? According to Ben Ari, the couture designers no longer have the impact of their predecessors.

"There are about six really top couture designers in Paris who each show between 50 and 100 designs each season. Their collections are the foundations for a plethora of ideas, but not the key base. "Things are happening in other parts of the world and we have to synthesize between the couture runway and world events. Couture today is just attractive fashion, but it doesn't influence the street. It's the other way around. The street influences fashion."

Summer and winter fashions over the next 18 months will reflect protest and guerrilla movements because that's what's happening in the street. "We don't just sit in a closed room and decide what we'll Today is edited by Joanna Yehiel.

wear tomorrow," says Ben Ari. "We go outside for inspiration."

She cites as an example the now passe rock-and-roll fashions: When disc jockeys started replaying old Elvis Presley records, it was the signal for a rock-and-roll revival, and once the kids started dancing again to those old tunes, it was obvious that fashions from the previous rock-and-roll era would reemerge. We saw a similar regeneration of clinging, vampish Hollywood styles when cinemas began screening films from the 1940s and early 1950s. Fashion took its cue from audience reaction."

Whenever she comes home, Ben Ari is loaded down with copies of Promostyl publications. Despite the new narrowed shapes which have been moving along the Parisian couture runways for the past few weeks. Promostyl is projecting big silhouettes...strange unaesthetic shapes in the eyes of anyone raised on the theory that pure, simple classicism spells elegance. "Classics today," Ben Ari notes, 'are the antithesis of fashion. A contemporary woman who goes out in a classic suit with matching bag, shoes and gloves is totally unimaginative." And imagination is permitted to run free at Promostyl, where antiquated fashion taboos are broken daily,

"There's a vast difference between letting ideas flow on paper, and designing for a manufacturer who, out of commercial considerations, has to harness creative freedom. Ben Ari is frustrated when reins are put on her thoughts, but she understands the control impulses. The larger the mass production, the tighter the rein. It has been slackened somewhat in a winter collection of dresses, skirts and desert capes which she is designing for Maskit.

The Celtics are obviously dead keen to ensure that the man widely accepted as the best all-round player in the world will remain in their court. But Bob Woolf. Bird's attorney and negotiator. has still not permitted him to affix his coveted signature to the dotted line. He and Bird have put off the final phase of negotiating until their return from Egypt. This postponement was a gambit which served a double purpose, Woolf' concedes coyly, creating widespread interest in the U.S. in the tour to Israel, and providing a bargaining ploy in the contract negotiations.

By DON GOULD

TEL AVIV. - Bob Woolf, the power behind the thrones of many U.S. athletes, and the man much involved in the NBA stars' visit to Israel, has single-handedly revolutionized the face of American sports. A jolly, effervescent, outgoing soul, not exactly of athletic proportions, his contribution has not been through athletic prowess but through bringing to bear his expertise in law into one of America's biggest fields of entertainment.

Just 15 years ago, Woolf, then a regular attorney, practising criminal and general law, "who also happened to love sports," as he describes himself, gave some minor legal, advice to Earl Wilson, the Boston Red Sox pitcher. To his surprise, Wilson explained to him that the top sportsmen never had any legal help whatsover. "Almost gratutitiously, Wolf filled the vacuum. Since then, he has become a major factor on the American sports scene.

Over the years, he has negotiated more than 1,800 contracts for too baseball, basketball, football and ice hockey players. He now represents over 300. Apart from negotiating their contracts, he handles all their affairs.

"In many cases, their pay checks come directly to my office," he says. "My clients live off allowances I give them. I pay all their bills, prepare their wills, trusts, corporate structures, investments and savings, special appearance fees... the lot."

He runs three offices with a full complement of attorneys in Boston, New York and Los Angeles. "It just keeps growing."

Among the men whom Woolf has represented are the most glamourous names in American sports - Larry Bird and Calvin Murphy (basketball with the NBA stars now in Israel), Carl Yestremski and Reggie Smith (baseball), Gino Capaleti and Houston Antoinne (football), Derek Sanderson and

Power behind the stars

Jerry Cheevers (ice hockey). Not always flatteringly, American sports writers have described Woolf as "the most powerful man in sports." For some he is "too powerful." "Rich and authorative franchise owners shudder at the mere snap of the lock on his attache-case" Newsweek wrote once about his power.

"That's not entirely accurate," Woolf says. "I do have the capacity to exert control. If I don't want a man to play for Boston then he's very liable to land up elsewhere. That give some power to change the configurations. But I would never misuse my power. For instance, I believe in the sanctity of the con-'ract. I'm proud to say that my clients and I have never reneged on a contract or tried to re-negotiate one. I lost Dr. J. (Julius Ervine, the Philadelphia 76ers star) when he wanted me to renegotiate his contract. My argument is one that owners appreciate. Would I accept a demand from them to restructure a contract in my client's ..... disfavour, just because he had a poor season? Never!"

The current visit of the top NBA stars evolved out of an approach to him by Haskell Cohen, head of the American Sports for Israel Federation. Nine of the visiting pros are Wooll's clients. His association with Israel, and his affection for the country are not new. His mother grew up here, and his father practised medicine here during the period of the Mandate. He and his wife Anne came to Israel for their honeymoon 20 years ago, and his brother and several other close relatives live in Israel.

For years he has supported an innovative basketball youth tourney under the auspices of the Jerusalem YMCA. Now, after this first venture into helping to bring America's top athletes to play in Israel, he hopes to broaden his involvement by putting into play his expertise to promote Israel into a force on the world's sports scene.

For instance Woolf recognizes that basketball coaching at the youth level, is the key to glory for Israel's basketball. "That's part of the reason why Larry Bird is such a fine player. From the outset he got the finest in fundamental coaching. The idea mooted by the The Post in a recent article about the need for Israel's basketball authorities to import top-line youth coaches caught his eye.

Amid negotiating multi-million contracts for Bird, Murphy and their like, Bob Woolf means to examine seriously the feasibility of promoting such a programme for the advancement of the game here.

British take lead in 420 races

By PAUL KOHN Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Andrew Hemmings, a 18-year-old boat-builder apprentice, and Jason Belben, a 17-yearold schoolboy, both from Britain, are the overall leaders after the second race off the coast here yesterday in the world 420 sailing championships.

in yesterday's race, the English crew finished second, 10 minutes behind the Israelis Yitzhak Suissa and Alon Dagon, with two other Israelis, Gil Yakimov and Dan Grunich, third. The winners of the first race, on Monday, Brigitta and Bjorn Bengston, of Sweden, were in sixth place.

The sailors of the 45 dinghies, from 13 countries, described race conditions here as "choppy seas with shifty breezes." The English duo have been training together for three years and finished 18th in last year's world championships held off Portsmouth. Two of the six races of the championships will take place today, starting off the Hilton Hotel beach

Viiddlesex fell behind Essex in the County Champiouships because of a surprise defeat at Lord's yesterday by Somerset. Somerset, 269 in their first imlags, were dismissed for 119 (Ed-monds 5 for 19, Emburey 4 for 28), Middlesex, 242 in their first innings, only needed 127 to win, but collapsed against the bowling of Booth (4 for 26) and Marks (3 for 17). Thus Essex, who beat Gloucester by an Innings in 2 days, now lead the championships.

Geoff Boycott, of Yorkshire, made 141 motout, including 20 fours and a six, in the second imnings of Yorkshire's match against Notlinghamshire, thus giving him 517 in his last two matches. He was recently criticized by the Yorkshire committee for "slow batting," and answered them in characteristic fashion. The (Continued from Page One) Israeli governments, both Likud and Alignment, had failed simply because they did not include meaningful budget cuts. "Trouble was, there were always pressure groups and special interest lobbies srong enough to prevent those vital budget incisions," he argued.

The finance minister also lashed out at Labour Party Chairman Shimon Peres, who said he could siash IS100b, from the state budget solely by pulling the Israel Defence Forces out of Lebanon and halting settlement and development in Judea and Samaria.

"I'm afraid Mr. Peres has his mathematics all mixed up," Aridor asserted, "Those two items do not add up to IS100b. Besides, you cannot terminate a war just when you want to."

Besides the price in soldiers' lives, Aridor continued, the economic price of Operation Peace for Galilee goes beyond the defence budget. As more and more reservists are called up, production lags and exports suffer. Asked to infer what the state of the economy would have been had Israel not launched the war in Lebanon, he replied: "The Galilee would now be desolate, with shells raining down upon Kiryat Shmona and everybody running away from the north."

The finance minister pledged that Israel's low-income citizens would be compensated for any economic pinch resulting from the austerity programmes and government subsidies will correlate with the rate of devaluation. But middle-income and affluent Israelis will have to accept some belt-tightening.

Asked if the average Israeli could accept such effects, Aridor noted: "Why not? If more than half a million average Israelis can afford to go on holiday abroad, then it is obvious that as individuals we are not in an economic bind after all. Why should people start wailing the moment you limit one or two of the benefits they have been receiving?"

Aridor assured the reporters that "this government has no intention of touching Israelis' savings by such moves as ending link sumer price index."

He concluded by saying: "You cannot expect to see results of a new economic programme overnight. This is not the Six Day War. This is another war of (economic) independence.' We are on the right track and we hope the public will back us to the hilt.

"We oppose a faster rate of devaluation of the shekel, because that would only lead to higher inflation. The recent 7.5 per cent devaluation was a one-shot corrective move we had to take in view of the deterioration of the value of our so-called European currency exchange basket."

In search of a policy

THE TROUBLE with Israeli policy towards the Palestinians in Judea and Samaria is that it does not seem to exist. Perhaps now that Defence Minister Moshe Arens is beginning to deal with the subject some identifiable policy may emerge.

To be sure, the authorities have a clear enough notion of what Israel's ultimate goal should be: namely to incorporate Judea and Samaria, presumably after the passage of five years of some kind of autonomy, into Israel. This would make the Palestinian residents of the territory Israeli subjects. Defence Minister Moshe Arens has suggested that they should, eventually, be offered Israeli citizenship, but it is doubtful whether his liberality on this point is shared by the majority of his cabinet colleagues.

There is also no doubt in the mind of anyone in authority that the 700,000 or so Palestinians in Judea and Samaria will be required to live side-by-side with a growing number of Israeli settlers. Within the next three years there are, according to current plans, to be some 100,000 of these settlers who, although still a distinct minority, presumably ought to assure Israel's permanent hold on the territory.

Jews are allowed, even made, to settle inside heavily populated Arab areas. The apparent expectation is that this would sooner or later persuade the Palestinians that they have no choice but to submit to Israeli rule - unless they prefer to cross the river east.

The former head of the General Security Service (Shin-Bet), Avraham Ahituv, pointed out in an article in Davar last Friday that the settlements might, at least psychologically. have already served as a hothouse for the rise of Jewish terrorism in Judea and Samaria. But this threat to the peaceful coexistence of the two communities does not appear to affect policy. And Ahituv's strictures have only prompted government apologists to query his giving public expression to his views. The substance is blandly ignored.

If the government's purpose is to induce the Palestinians to come to terms with the fact of Israel's permanence, it is hard to see how official conduct, whether at the cabinet level or on the ground, serves that purpose.

While Dr. Menahem Milson was the head of the civil administration, the Village Leagues were actively promoted as a counterweight to PLO influence, and as the most realistic hope of an Israeli dialogue with Palestinian moderates. This strategy was reversed by his successor, Aluf-Mishne Shlomo Ilya, starting earlier this year, and Ilya has been fully upheld by the newly appointed coordinator of activities in the territories, Tat-Aluf (Res.) Binyamin Ben-Eliezer.

Now it may be granted that the leagues, for a while, enjoyed a status that was out of proportion to their real strength. Mr. Ben-Eliezer is not prepared to give them the status of favourite sons of the Israeli administration, Fair enough, But he has gone to the other extreme. He believes the real Palestinian leadership can be found only in the West Bank towns. So he wants to prevent the leagues from assuming any political role whatever.

The formal argument is that the leagues are not supposed to dabble in politics, and thus cannot form a political party, as they are planning to do. On the other hand it may be that the military administrators don't like the Palestinian National Covenant, drafted by the six Village League leaders in Judea and Samaria as an antidote to the PLO's own notorious covenant. Their new "covenant" calls for the recognition of Israel within recognized boundaries but also visualizes establishment of a separate Palestinian entity. But if the administrators expect any political grouping on the West Bank not to pay obeisance to the goal of at least an entity, they are, at best,

The banning of political activity by Palestinian moderates would again leave the field wide open for the reassertion of power by the PLO. This might suit those in authority who believe in the efficacy of the iron fist, and of nothing else. Mr. Ben-Eliezer, and Mr. Arens, too, would doubtless deny that this is, or should be, official policy. But then what is official

POSTSCRIPTS

NEVER HAD the press by scholars and students interested paid such rapt attention to a speech by Prime Minister Menachem Begin. The premier was addressing an Israel Bonds dinner in the Knesset, not the kind of event that creates hot news, but the journalists and technicians had decided to lay bets on how long the premier's address would last. Twenty of them, put IS100 each into the kitty; their predictions varied from an address of 13 minutes to one of 42.

The dinner began at 8 p.m., but Begin didn't get up to speak until 10.08 because of drawn-out introductions. Finally, the prime minister gave a very short speech -18 minutes and 16 seconds, and a Kol Yisrael journalist, who made the closest guess, collected IS2,000.

NATIONAL BROAD-CASTING COMPANY programmes on Jewish topics will soon be included in the National Jewish Archive of Broadcasting in New York's Jewish Museum. Irwin Segelstein, vice chairman of the board of NBC, said recently that he was delighted to provide broadcast material for use in studying Jewish experience.

The first programmes sent to the museum include 10 shows from NBC TV's Eternal Light show, which was broadcast from 1952 to 1972. They include a conversation with Yigael Yadin, a programme on Shalom Aleichem and a profile of Eli Wiesel. Also included is a special programme on the Eichmann trial. The National Jewish Archive of Broadcasting was established by a grant from the Charles Revson Foundation,

ISRAEL TV recently received a favourable review from Amin Hawidi, a former member of the Egyptian government. Hawidi. writing in the Egyptian leftist paper Al Ahali, said he watched Israel TV's programme in Arabic during a visit to Jordan and found it "objective and intelligent," including those items relating to Egypt and the rest of the Arab world. Hawidi added that he wished Egypt's media could be as good and fair as Israel TV in Arabic, "in order that we can be respected."

LIBERIA IS a small state which suffers from a large number of natural and political handicaps, but these handicaps have made it easier in some ways for Liberia to reestablish diplomatic relations with Such is the view of one of this country's leading authorities on Liberia, Dr. Yakutiel Gershoni, a lecturer in the department of Middle East and African history at Tel Aviv University, who has been teaching African history for the past decade.

Gershoni notes that whereas Liberia with its small area (111,000 sq.km.(, small population (one-anda-half to two million inhabitants) and its presence in an African backwater, has little influence on the continent of Africa, these facts have also given it the good fortune to be free of border disputes or political friction with the states that surround it.

Being isolated and hence insulated, Liberia can restore its ties with Israel without this step being exploited by its neighbours. Gershoni predicts that Liberia's neighbours will neither mount a campaign against it nor make capital out of the renewal of ties in any other context.

Liberia is also handicapped by chronic problems of development, going back many decades. The situation was compounded by the world economic recession after 1973, he notes.

Liberia gets economic support from the U.S., because of its difficult situation, and there is no doubt that the U.S. has considerable influence upon Liberia," Gershoni declares. "Given that the U.S. can be called Israel's one and only ally, I would say there seems to be a link between Liberia's economic dependence upon the U.S. and President Samuel Doe's decision to restore relations."

The Africa-watcher would not elaborate further on this theme. although he noted that American officials had three times made public statements denying that any American pressure had been exerted on Monrovia to re-establish diplomatic relations with Israel.

(However, this reporter was left speculating that perhaps Monrovia was given to understand that a restoration of ties could do it only good in Washington, both with the Reagan Administration and with Congress, and that this might be considered in the context of Liberia's economic difficulties.)

AS TO Liberia's political handicaps, Gershoni suggests that while the regime of President Samuel Doe was firmly in the saddle, it was too new to be genuinely rooted, and it needed advice to solve certain social and economic problems in order to enhance its stability.

Said Gershoni: "President Doe wants to overcome, or rather to offset, certain political handicaps without undue dependence on superpowers, with their neacolonialist aura. He does not want strings attached, and he does not want to give a global tit-for-tat. Israel is close to Liberia in size and speaks to Liberia as an equal. It has no expansionist aims in Africa. These factors work to Israel's advantage.

He points out that Liberia does not have "a Moslem problem like Mauritania, Mali, Nigeria and other African states." While there may be as many as 300,000 Liberian Moslems, they are not united as a community, and they have no political influence as a bloc.

Geographically speaking, Gershoni notes, Liberia happens to be remote from the present trouble spots on the continent. "It's a long way from north-west Africa, with Polisario insurgency against Morocco; it's a long way from Chad, invaded by Libya; it's a long way from the southern provinces of Zaire, where Angola is nibbling away." For all these reasons Gershoni believes that the various trouble-making elements in Africa be they Arab nationalists, leftists or Marxists - do not have a stick ready in their hands with which to smite Liberia, nor grounds or opportunity for spreading incitement on the domestic scene.

HE BELIEVES that the April 1980 revolution, which toppled the black colonialist regime of the Libero-Americans and brought Doe to power, was "understood by and large in the other African states." There was some distress at the execution of a score or less leaders, but those executions have been greatly exaggerated in the West. No African state severed its ties with iberia after the coup, and the Organization of African Unity accepted the new regime without demur. Gershoni adds.

He recalls that the U.S. Administration was apprehensive, concerned about which course the Doe regime might take, especially after the new president visited Libya and Ethiopia. "President Doe seems to have been attracted, as a military man, by certain aspects of those two regimes, and he put out feelers for possible cooperation during his visits, but he soon dropped the idea, when the U.S. Administration offered the same level of military, economic and political assistance as before the coup, it seems."

Gershoni cautions: "But you shouldn't imagine that Doe would jump at every American wish."

President Doe would like Israeli experts and instructors in Liberia in a variety of fields, he says, because the quality of Israeli technical aid and other cooperation still carries great prestige all over Africa. "In

Dry Bones

Liberia they still remember that Israelis work hard."

As a military man, President Doe has studied the reputation and the make-up of the Israel Defence Forces, "and I would not be surprised if he wants to reorganize the Liberian Army," Gershoni notes.

'Israel has an image in Africa when it comes to repelling external threats and handling internal disorder, too. There could be greater friction one day between the various ethnic groups, and he needs to look ahead," says Gershoni. "He has as much American military aid as he wants, but perhaps he wants to have Israeli military instructors as Gershoni recalls that Doe himself has the reputation of following a modest life-style, travelling around in a jeep, living in a simple residence, and that he believed in setting an example when he imposed a belt-tightening policy on ministers and civil servants.

"This is a far cry from President

Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire with his private yacht, his private plane, and his private helicopter. Doe knows what he and his country can afford, of course."

Gershoni also points out that Doy believes in sharing power with those capable of handling administrative responsibility, unlike his late, lamented predecessor. William Tolbert Jr. who came to a bloody end in the 1980 coup.

"When I visited Liberia, and Tolbert ordered his press officer to show me around in an official car, the press officer turned up two hours late for our appointment," Gershoni recalls.

"I asked the press officer what kept him, and he said: 'I couldn't get hold of the president to sign the petrol vouchers," Gershoni related, with a laugh. "Tolbert went to such extremes that he insisted on deciding which colour paint must be used to paint every government office." The writer is a member of The Jerusalem Post editorial staff.

ALIENATING DIASPORA JEWS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — At a recent Israel Bonds dinner, Deputy Prime Minister David Levy remarked that Diaspora Jews give money to this country to help themselves "stand taller and with pride" and that their contribution is "minimal" in relation to Israel's economy.

This is an outrageous insult to Israel's best friends, Jews abroad, who do all they can to help the Jewish State. Is this country so naive as to believe that it could go on with "business as usual" if the Jews of America didn't give millions annually and if their lobbying efforts didn't bring forth additional billions from the U.S. Government? Jerusalem (Gstaad, Switzerland).

With all the talk in Israel about aliya, can anyone really believe that it would be better for wealthy American Jews to be here working as Israelis, rather than do what they are doing now?

I love Israel and am not trying to run it down. But without foreign money, the IDF might have only stones to throw back at invading Arab armies and little else. Israel attitudes on this subject, as exemplified by David Levy, must change. Israel exists in a hostile world. Why alienate Diaspora Jews? M. SCOTT GORDON

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir. — Yoel Cohen of Jerusalem (August 11) writes about his visit to Beth Shalom headquarters in a village on the outskirts of Haifa. The house he visited is obviously a missionary centre in the Druse village of Usafiya which has no connection whatsoever with Beth Shalom.

Beth Shalom, Haifa, is situated on Mount Carmel almost opposite the Dan Carmel, with an annex, not yet in use, near Gan Ha'em. Beth Shalom in Haifa is a most efficiently run boarding house in true

I have spent my holidays three years running at Beth Shalom (which, incidentally, is in the midst of Central Carmel) and was always impressed by its cleanliness and even more by the friendliness and helpfulness of the personnel.

Moreover, I wandered through the whole building and encountered no sign whatsoever of missionary activity. On the contrary, the walls of the rooms are adorned by small reproductions of the Chagall windows at Hadassah and quotations from the Prophets. ROBERT BAER

HELPING TOURISTS To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir. - We have read with interest the recent correspondence in your columns on the subject of home hospitality for tourists, both individuals and members of groups, visiting Israel.

We should like to bring to the notice of your readers some facts about our Voluntary Tourist Service: In addition to welcoming and assisting tourists arriving at Ben Gurion Airport, our volunteers, numbering about 400, serve in the evening hours in the lobbies of all major hotels in Tel Aviv, Jerusalem, Haifa and Eilat - with representatives in Nahariya and Arad.

The visitor is offered free advice and help for any problem, including the tracing of long-lost friends and relations. A volunteer nurse visits any tourist who has the misfortune to fall ill or be hospitalised.

We also have a home hospitality programme, whereby we arrage for tourists to visit Israelis who have similar interests, and speak the same language, whatever it may be. The V.T.S. head office is situated at 28 Bialik Street, Tel Aviv 61048.

KNESSET DELEGATION

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — I read, with horror and a sense of outrage, the note in "Public faces" of August 12, saying that 1S2.5 million was to be spent to send 11 MKs on a jaunt to South Korea - this at a time when the government is seeking to tax child allowances and old age pensions, and impose VAT on fruit.

If these MKs are so keen to go to South Korea, then let them pay for JACK G. BAUM

THE IMMIGRANT'S LOT

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir. — I refer to Dr. A.S. Luder's letter ("New immigrants" August 17). As pessimistic as it may sound, I feel the doctor is way off target with his observations, regarding the absorption of immigrants.

In the government and public agencies which olim are forced to deal with. I have yet to meet a new immigrant who received good, swift especially courted from even a miniscule percentage of clerks. Granted there are exceptions, but they are usually olim themselves and can be counted by

The mention of Jewish Agency shlihim brings to mind a recent interesting news item. Olim were asked how many were persuaded to make the big move as a result of their shaliah's influence. Out of the several hundred questioned, not one hand went up. Surely they are in general "hard working and wellmeaning," but they know they've got our "business" either way. In the case of my family, all we got from our shaliah was the necessary processing of our file. The main reason olim leave according to the Haifa doctor, is "a failure to plan and be informed." Isn't this the primary duty of a shaliah?

Finally, and most important, the doctor believes that with the immigrants' collective voices, we can influence Israeli public life. With all due respect, whom is he trying to fool? I challenge the doctor to name one change brought about by olim crying aloud constructively, yet there are over 100,000 native English-speaking immigrants from advanced western countries.

And so, alas, we are confined to writing letters to the editor with no hope for change in sight. M. ZIRIN

BETH HATEFUTSOTH AND GOLDMANN

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — The report of August 2 that the late Nahum Goldmann wanted to deport 100,000 Moroccan Jews from Israel once again shows the true face of this individual. He failed in his job as a leader but succeeded in meeting all the world's leaders and letting everyone know that he met with them.

Goldmann denied knowing what was happening to the Jews of Europe during World War II. Yet there have been eye witnesses who told Goldmann of the annihilation of the Jews.

Goldmann tried to have Jews deported from the USA during World War II because they were Palestinians organizing demonstrations and exhibitions to arouse the American Jewish public to action to save Jewish lives.

Nonetheless, the name of Nahum Goldmann adorns the building of the finest museum in this country, the Museum of the Diaspora, Beth Hatefutsoth. In my opinion his name should be removed from this important edifice. He failed the Diaspora and he did little if anything for the museum except foist his name on it. He never paid dues to the museum and to the best of my knowledge, did not contribute to it, though he was a wealthy man. MURRAY S. GREENFIELD Tel Aviv.
